Paragraphs of the Week

Sumner Sewall, president of the Maine Senate, predicts that Federal funds will be spent to reinforce Maine airport runways. He expects the work will make it possible for the U. S. Army's heavy planes from the Northeast Air Base, now under construction at Chicopee, Mass., to land at Maine's airfields.

Chief John W. Healy reports 333 arrests by Maine State Police in January. These gave the State $5,256.53 from fines. Officers investigated 128 highway accidents and recovered $2,778.57 in stolen property.

Commissioner George J. Stoble of the Maine Inland Fish and Game department urges owners of dogs to watch their animals and keep them from running wild in the woods. With hundreds of deer being slaughtered by killer dogs, he says the situation is becoming serious. Anyone who knows of such marauding canines is asked to report the information to the game wardens. These dogs are reported to include all breeds from collies to cocker spaniels.

President Roosevelt started a cruise aboard the U. S. S. Tuscaloosa last week amid secrecy and rumors of conferences with British and French agents in the Caribbean Sea. Instead, he sailed directly to the Panama Canal, where he inspected U. S. defenses during the week-end. He continued to the Pacific coast for a fishing trip.

Angered by England's continued interference with U. S. mails en route to foreign ports, Senator Clark of Missouri wants American airmail planes prohibited from landing at English stations. He claims British censors are "rifling" U. S. mails. While Chairman Key Pittman of the Foreign Relations Committee thinks it is about time to stop "illegal discrimination against our commerce and our mails," he says the State Department must consult with the committee before action can be taken. Representative Maas of Minnesota proposed that our warships be used to carry the mails. He claims England is forcing Germany to act intended to make the Yankees mad enough to enter the war on Britain's side.

The Census Bureau reports that Maine's independent retailers increased their inventories in 1939 by 3.2%. Sales for last year were 4.6% above 1938.

In addition to the censorship of mails passing through Bermuda, the British have issued regulations for the search of persons on air-clippers landing there. "Passengers will not be allowed to carry on their persons sealed letters, photographs, sketches or documents and will be subject to search regardless of nationality."

A $40,000 fire destroyed a two-story garage and auto supply store in Calais last Sunday. The loss was divided equally between building and stock by Cole Bridges, the owner.

Ten thousand enthusiasts crowded the Snow Bowl for Camden's fifth annual winter carnival Sunday. It was the final exhibition of skating, dog racing and other sports which started Friday.

The blizzard which struck the New England coast last week, sparing most of Maine and tying up Boston for about 24 hours after the storm, is reported to be the worst since the steamer Portland sank in 1893. Metropolitan stores were closed and movement of necessities was difficult.

ROBERT W. KIRK SERIOUSLY INJURED—CAR OVERTURNED

Robert W. Kirk of Locke Mills suffered a badly fractured left shoulder, a deeply cut hand, injured foot, and multiple bruises when his car went out of control and tipped over at South Bethel Sunday afternoon. Mrs. Kirk who was with him escaped injury.

It is reported that the accident was caused by a broken steering knuckle. The accident was investigated by State Officer John Maguire.

GOULD DEFEATS WEBBON RESERVES 40-29

After losing to South Paris Thursday night in the play-off for Oxford County representation in the State Tourney, Gould quickly recovered its winning ways and soundly trounced the Hebron Reserves in the last half of Friday afternoon's tussle. Coach Anderson, figuring his regulars to be tired from the previous night's trip and game, started his second five men hoping to stay within striking distance for at least a period. This, however, was not to succeed as the visitors ran away with the game and had an 8 to 2 advantage in three minutes. Here the regulars came in and things began to "look-up" as Wentzel and Hutchins immediately scored and brought the game to 8-6. Another Gould ringer evened the count at 8 all as the period ended. Hebron gained a one point advantage in the second quarter with the score 16-17 at half time. Tucker, Swan, Palmer, and Wentzel took turns in the last half dropping counters after good ball handling to set up shots for the winners. Nettleton, Hebron center, was outstanding for the visitors, scoring 15 of his team's 29 points.

GOULD LOSES PLAY-OFF 34-33

At Hebron last Thursday in a gymnasium packed with frenzied fans, Gould staged an uphill battle to finally lose out 34-33. It was the old story of nervousness and excitement playing havoc with the team in the early stages of the game and allowing Paris to gain a 13 to 5 advantage in the first period.

Going into the final period still eight points behind, the "Blue and Gold" staged another of their great last ditch rallies and only the firing of the gun to end the game at 33-34 saved South Paris and delivered them a second one point victory over Gould.

Wentzel was the outstanding man on the floor as he and Swan led the scoring for Gould. Hutchins and Tucker also played exceptionally good ball especially in the last half. "Buddy" Clough's work in replacing Palmer deserves special mention also.

Heald for Paris played great ball, but Muncie led in the scoring with 13 points. Durgin and Peterson played fine defensive ball and, although Tucker had Daniels pretty well bottled up, he was an important cog in South Paris' victory.

DEFEAT NORWAY 30-16

WEDNESDAY EVENING IN LAST LEAGUE GAME

A gallant band of determined players "turned-in" as neat a victory here Wednesday as any fan could wish for. The defensive play of the Academy team was superb in the first half as Norway was held to three free throws and not a goal from the field. Captain Wentzel had a hard time to get going but when he did, things began to happen as he ended up with 12 points to bring his grand total for the year to 192 points to lead his team on the offensive. Nick Amato, drafted from the second team, was all that anyone could ask for, playing excellent ball especially in team work and defense. Tucker, playing center, was the hero of the game as he held Luck, Norway's star player, to three points after he had scored 26 against South Paris last Friday. Buddy Clough played a grand game, holding his man to no field goals for the entire game. Hutchins played his best game of the year. He seemed to be everywhere at the right time and sparked his team throughout as he also gathered seven points for Gould.

This game finally clinched the Western Maine Conference Championship for Gould with seven victories and one defeat in the League schedule, with South Paris second with six wins and two losses. It was the eleventh victory in 14 starts for Gould.

How To Prepare A Grapefruit

IT'S easy to peel a grapefruit if you do it the correct way. With a sharp knife, cut off rind in a circular sawing motion, cutting deep enough to remove white membrane with the peel.

Perfect sections can be removed from the peeled grapefruit by cutting along the side of each dividing membrane to the core. Sections then can easily be lifted out.

Careful arrangement enhances the appeal of grapefruit in salad. Color contrast is also important and can be supplied by green or red pepper strips; cooked or fresh cranberries; pimiento cheese balls or raw carrot.

LISTEN TO THIS

By TOM FIZDALE

After the special preview of Paramount's Technicolor film, "Dr. Cyclops," four New York radio directors, enchanted by her speaking voice, wired starlet Janice Logan, only woman in the Cyclops film, asking her to fly east for radio commitments. She had to say no because she's never been on the air or in the air, and both assignments sounded terrifying.

Watch for a story on Fibber McGee and Molly authored by their 18 year old daughter, Katherine Jordan. Katherine wants to be a writer so the editor of a national fan mag is giving her a chance to sell her first story with an assignment to do a yarn on her famous pop and mom.

Now that Rudy Vallee has snagged himself a new dairy sponsor for radio, he'll probably forego his picture directing ambitions to concentrate on the broadcasting business.

The hat that holds the questions for Prof. Quiz on his CBS broadcasts dates from an early broadcast in Charlotte, N. C. Quiz borrowed it from the local station manager and now refuses to do his programs without it. Tommy Riggs has a hat superstition too. He never sings a Betty Lou song without holding an old brown felt hat in his hand. Reason: he had it on the day a station manager in Pittsburgh heard him do a Betty Lou characterization and hired him on the spot.

Bob Crosby's sponsor is responsible for introducing the first radio-luncheon party ever put on the air regularly. It's "Luncheon at the Waldorf" starring Ilka Chase as mistress-of-ceremonies. Guests really get lunch too and Miss Chase interviews a celebrity during each half hour broadcast.

Ted Weems, maestro on the NBC Beat the Band program, is readying a book on the music making business.

John J. Anthony, director of radio's Original Good Will Hour agrees with F. B. I. Headman Hoover, who says that 19 is the "Dangerous" age, judging from crime statistics. Anthony, however, thinks that early marriages would do a lot to make 19 less dangerous.

ZaSu Pitts, in New York to do a long run on CBS' Big Sister program, is wowing sophisticated Manhattanites with a novel idea. When ZaSu goes to the fights in Madison Square Garden, she carries a portable Philco along. This enables the flutery-handed star to appreciate the full value of the punches—she can hear them talked about while watching them being driven home.

ENDURING WISDOM

The SNAPSHOT GUILD

TAKE CHARACTER PICTURES

Character studies make interesting, truthful pictures—well worth having in your snapshot collection.

CHARACTER studies make interesting pictures. Choose a subject whose face is marked by character and experience, and you have opportunity for a real picture—perhaps a whole series of pictures.

Elderly persons are usually chosen for character studies—but there's no reason why a younger person can't be used, or even a child.
For example, a picture of Johnny posting over his spinach, or trying to puzzle out an especially hard problem in arithmetic.

Try to make your picture truthful to the character. Sometimes the face alone is sufficient for the picture. In other cases, you may want to show the subject in his or her normal setting. For example, a sweet-faced grandmother in her favorite chair by the window, busy with her sewing basket. These accessories, the basket and chair, would help explain the subject. They would also add truth and natural quality to the picture.

When the face only is shown, a plain background is best. With most cameras, you will have to include more than the subject's head. However, when an enlargement is made, everything except the head can be masked out. The picture above was enlarged in that manner—the original negative included the subject from the waist up.

Character pictures can be taken indoors or out. It's fun to take them indoors with photo lights, for then you can try different lighting effects, and choose the one that brings out the subject's character to best advantage.

It's also fun to create characters for pictures, by means of costume and make-up. Dig down into the family trunk or storage boxes, and find some old-fashioned dresses or outmoded suits. Have members of the family dress up in these, and pose for a series of "old family album" pictures. Also, try creating characters—such as a pirate, or an old-time scissor grinder. This isn't difficult, for with a little cleverness, you can improvise various costumes easily, just from materials you find around the house.

Making character studies will develop your skill as a photographer—and it's a type of picture-taking you should know. Try it—you'll have plenty of fun.

THE STORY

CHAPTER I—Captain Carl Norwood has been sent from his native England to the Kadir River district in India, along with his indispensable manservant, Moses O'Leary, soldier of fortune. Norwood's job is to survey the district to determine whether a valuable secret diamond mine belongs to the temple priests or to the ruler, the Maharajah of Kadir.

CHAPTER II—Norwood calls on the British Residency to pay his initial respects. On his way he catches a glimpse of two women in a palace carriage, one of whom is young and beautiful. The other woman he knows to be the Maharajah's wife. O'Leary later tells him that the young woman is an American girl named Lynn Harding, who with her aunt, Mrs. Deborah Harding, is a guest at the palace.

CHAPTER III—Mrs. Harding and Lynn, her niece, are guests at the Maharajah's palace. On a sightseeing tour Mrs. Harding sprains an ankle, and sends to the palace for aid. Prince Rundhia, handsome, spoiled nephew of the ruler, comes to her rescue and takes her back to the palace where he meets Lynn.

Then Aunt arrived. After that, there was nothing to do but to listen to Aunt's distant confessions. She was wonderful. Even Rundhia admitted her spunk. Dressed in a formal evening gown on purpose to make Lynn feel ashamed of herself, taped and strapped by the doctor until she could hardly move, in torture from the twisted ankle, she proposed to dominate that company. She did, until Norwood subdued her. She wasn't used to being snubbed by mere captains.

"What do Engineer officers do?" she demanded.

"Nothing," he said, "except answer questions. Why? I might lend you a man who can do things."

The Maharajah was interrupted by the arrival of the Bengali doctor, followed by a servant with a big blue goblet on a tray. The Maharajah swallowed the contents of the goblet in one long draught and Norwood noticed that he became immediately more at ease. But Norwood was also watching Rundhia, who left off dancing with Lynn and accompanied the Bengali to the door, talking to him low-voiced.

Norwood promptly commandeered Lynn.

"If I were you," he said, "I'd stick to champagne. The cocktails taste phoney."

Lynn wasn't sure she liked him. On the other hand, she wasn't sure she didn't.

"Why were you rude to Aunt?" "She was rude to me," he answered.

"She had no need at today, a who sent her?"

"Who is? You, for instance? Prince? Or rebel? You know what happens to rebels, don't you, unless their friends are reliable?"

A great gong boomed. It was an ancient as the place. It was the bronze voice of memory.

"Prince!" exclaimed the Maharajah. "No! I'm sorry Lynn dear, lead the way. We will all follow."

So the Maharajah came last, to the servants' hall, and it was Lynn who contrived the coming Norwood's luck and a day later he found himself between the Maharajah and Aunt. Rundhia and Lynn sat opposite; the Maharajah at one end of the table, the Maharajah at the other.

The Maharajah only pretended to eat. In theory, he had abandoned caste restrictions, but in practice, he lacked the Maharajah's courage. He wilted under Aunt Harding's barrage of remarks. Her vigor depressed him. Aunt had no patience with weaklings.

"You're a hypochondriac," she told him.

The Maharajah sighed. "I am a victim of public duty. Affairs of state impose a sedentary life that has ruined my health. But I have found that Rundhia's physician un-derstands my ailment."

The physician re-appeared in the doorway, nervous, unself-assertive. He came behind Aunt's chair and whispered to her. Norwood couldn't hear what he said, but he saw him

Norwood found himself between the Maharajah and Aunt.

lay two pellets on a plate at Aunt's right hand.

"Drugs! No thank you!" "What are they?" asked the Maharajah.

"Exactly the same that your Highness has been taking for your nerves," said the physician.

"I have iron nerves," said Aunt. The physician smiled. He separated the two pellets with a fork and held the plate toward the Maharajah.

"Set her the example," he suggested.

"My monotonous life consists of nothing else than setting good examples," said the Maharajah. "If it won't hurt me, it won't hurt you. He reached for a pellet."

Norwood noticed that the doctor moved the plate so that the Maharajah's fingers closed on the one that had been nearest Aunt. If it was a trick it was a good one. Rundhia was paying rather witty attention to Lynn; he was making her laugh.

"An accomplished, but against my better judgment," said Aunt. She swallowed the other pellet.

"Thank you," said the Bengali. "Thank you, madam. That relieves my anxiety. You should not be here. You should be in bed. There is no knowing what people's nerves may do to them when they have suffered a bodily shock such as you received this afternoon."

He bowed himself out.

Aunt used her napkin suddenly. Norwood watched her. He was just in time to prevent her falling from the chair. Everyone, including the Maharajah, jumped up. Lynn ran to her. The servants formed a scurrying around Lynn and Aunt. The Maharajah scolded the Maharajah sotto voce.

Rundhia sent a servant running for the doctor. The other servants picked up Aunt and carried her into the next room, where she groaned on a couch and nearly fainted from humiliation. Rundhia met the doctor at the door. Norwood, watching them, pretended not to, wasn't certain whether they spoke. The doctor nodded, put on his most judicial professional air, felt Aunt's pulse and antsy her shoulders.

"She has a temperature. It is impossible to say but I think she is only suffering from nervous exhaustion and perhaps, too, from a cold." He turned again to the Maharajah: "I advise that Miss Lynn Harding should be moved into the palace, so that Mrs. Harding may be quiet."

Lynn laughed: "That's a testimonial for me! But thank you, I'll take care of her."

"No," said the doctor. He caught Rundhia's eye. Rundhia came to his rescue and made signals to the Maharajah, who wanted nothing better than to have Lynn under her own roof.

"Lynn, dear, please do as the doctor tells you. Please, please."

Aunt groaned and protested that it was a shame to inflict Lynn on the Maharajah, but she was overruled. She was carried out on an improvised litter and rushed to the guest-house, where Lynn's belongings were collected by the servants and conveyed to the palace.

CHAPTER V

Rundhia was puzzled and Lynn knew it. She enjoyed it. It was cool and beautiful beneath the moonlit trees in the garden.

"You are the strangest mixture of intelligence and innocence that I have ever met," said Rundhia. "You are in love with all this. You are thrilled by the exotic strangeness. But it's all old stuff to me, remember. I'm a babe in the woods, too, in a certain sense. I'm as lost as you are. Things and places don't make life worth living. It's the people in the places, and the things they do together. If you loved me and I loved you—"

"But neither of us does," Lynn interrupted. "We are East and West. Europe delights you because you can't ever really understand it. And the East enraptures me for the same reason."

"So we've that much in common," said Rundhia. "Let me tell you something else we have in common. We like each other."

"Do we?" "Yes. One would have to be blind, deaf, demented, not to like you. What's wrong with me?"

Lynn's defensive tactic was a thousand times more shrewd than Aunt would dream of giving her credit for.

"Well, for instance, why do you dislike Captain Norwood?"

"For the same reason that he doesn't like me," said Rundhia. "Cherchez la femme. Thank the father and mother who bred him, he's only an Engineer. If he were Cavalry, I might feel jealous. Lynn, I love you."

"How many women have you said that to?" "Hundreds. But I lied to all the others."

"I have sometimes had to lie to Aunt. But I'm not nearly as practiced a liar as you must be. Let's be truthful."

"I am telling you the truth. I have always thought myself a cynic. I didn't know I had a heart until I met you. I have found and lost it in the same moment. It is yours. What will you do with it?"

His arm crept around her. He hardly knew how she slipped away from him. She walked away. She ran along the path, her arms extended to embrace the moonlit luxury of hue and view and perfumed flowers. By the time he overtook her, her retort was ready:

"Perhaps you don't like men with red hair?"

"I am looking," he answered, "at your hair. I want to bury my hands in it, bathe my face in it, breathe the—"

"Burst! I washed it and the water's terrible!"

She escaped him again. Her black pajamas vanished into shadow, she became a beautiful, disheveled head in a golden aureole that said:

"Is Captain Norwood married?" "I didn't ask him."

"Well, why didn't you ask him?" "I didn't care."

"Good!" said Rundhia. "I'm going to make you care about one thing else. Come along. I'll be here. Come this way."

He led her up steps to the top of the ancient garden wall. There was a summerhouse on the wall, a sort of kiosk; it had been swept and provided with cushions by a servant who crunched in shadow. Rundhia ordered the servant away. He went and lurked at the foot of the steps, but Rundhia shouted at him and he fled. Rundhia led Lynn into the open-arched kiosk.

"You have promised," she said. "to behave."

"Do you believe men's promises when they're in love? Are you as naive as that?" "Yes. Don't be silly. Let us look at the view."

"Look at me."

His eyes were hardly less fiery than the glowing end of his cigarette. They made Lynn's flesh tingle. He threw away the cigarette.

"Lynn, you romantic girl, this scene enchants you because love has stolen on you unaware. Neither of us until now has ever known what love is."

"Do you think you know now?" she retorted.

"You know I know it. You are cruel."

"I wish you'd sit farther away," she interrupted. "Why don't you make love to your own countrywomen?"

"There isn't in all India such a lovely girl as you are."

"How do you know? It's true, isn't it, that most of them are kept in seclusion and you're not allowed to see them? Is that why you make love to me? Why not burgle a zennana?"

"Lynn," he said, "I don't make love. I am love. And you also. We are love itself, as a musician becomes music. Why waste the glorious hours?"

"What do you know about music?" she retorted. "Can you sing Indian songs?"

"Yes, love songs! I play the guitar."

"You can? What fun! Why not get it? There couldn't be a more perfect place for singing than this garden wall in moonlight."

Rundhia sensed that he had cast his fly too boldly. She wasn't hooked. She needed more subtle persuasion. He shouted to the servant to fetch the guitar. There was no answer; the servant had taken him too strictly at his word, he was out of earshot. Rundhia shouted again and again. He swore under his breath. Then he governed his anger and smiled at Lynn:

"Will you wait here if I go and get it?"

"Yes, but—"

"What?"

"You look murderous. Don't whip the servant!"

His undercover man was waiting for him in the usual place, by the gate in the wall that separated the Maharajah's palace from Rundhia's—an unimportant-looking but peculiarly unmeek Hindu, who spoke in a low voice without preliminary gestures of respect:

"The priests have learned of Captain Norwood's arrival. They sent me to speak with his Eurasian spy, O'Leary, who is a reptile. O'Leary has already detected the opening of the mine."

Rundhia thought swiftly, and spoke slowly: "Go and tell the priests that Captain Norwood is here to line his own pocket. Say he is in debt and seeks an opportunity to pay his debts. His secret report will be in favor of the highest bidder. But don't say you heard it from me. Say O'Leary was drunk and you heard it from him. Make it perfectly clear to the priests that any other officer than Norwood would be scrupulously fair, so let them think about it."

Then Rundhia found a servant in the garden of his own palace and sent him running to fetch the guitar.

The palace front gate clanged behind Norwood. The sullen sentry stood at ease, then easy and resumed his snooze. Norwood turned his horse along the road by the palace wall, riding slowly because the axis was following on foot. He had ridden about fifty yards to a curve in the road when O'Leary stepped forth from a shadow. He didn't look like O'Leary. He was wearing a turban, and dressed like a dripping wet, dirty Hindu of no caste or ostensible occupation. Norwood drew rein and listened, watching the road for pedestrians.

"I didn't stable the mare in the city. She's back in camp. I'll need her later."

"What for?"

"As soon as I'm dressed decent again, I'll go back to the bazaar. I told a yarn about coming back to camp for more money. I'm going to need it."

"What happened?"

"Plenty. I was right about Noor Mahlam. They've ditched him. So I did too. He was only grand bait. He talked too much, then tried to have me knifed to stop me talking. They'd a trap set for me and I walked straight into it. A woman. I'll tell you about her later; she'd fill a dictionary."

"Never mind about the woman. What happened?"

"Nothing happened there, it couldn't. I left your mare tied up to the veranda railing, military saddle and all, and your initials on the bridle. So they couldn't take chances. And I could. And I did."

"That's enough about you. What happened?"

"Kindergarten stuff. Confidence game. The woman's bully flattered me. I knew the woman's sister in Lahore, and he said the woman's sister'd given me a rep for being smarter than most, and a man of my word. Then he introduced me to the woman. She's all honey and poison. Sister my eye. Two words, and I knew she was lying about that."

"Never mind her lies, or whose sister she is. How much truth did she tell you?"

"Not much, barring that I'm the most exciting man she'd ever seen. She was true enough excited, so I knew the bully was listening in; and he weren't her proper bully neither; he was someone who'd been rung in on her, and she scared of him and not used to his ways. She said there'd be a thousand rupees for me if I'd act discreet."

"Whose thousand rupees?" asked Norwood.

"Trust your Moses O'Leary. I asked her that quick. She said it was Prince Rundhia's thousand rupees. So I knew it wasn't."

"What does she want you to do?"

"She told me a mess o' lies about Prince Rundhia having quarrelled with the temple Brahmins, and him wanting to get back at 'em, to spite 'em. She told me, and I acted surprised, that there's a diamond mine in the temple area. There's a thousand rupees for me if I persuade you to run your survey line slap through the temple area, so that the mine will belong to the Maharajah instead of the temple priests."

"What did you tell her?"

"I said you're easy, but you're honest. I said I'll have to find some way of artfully deceiving you if you're to do what's needed. I said I'd have to look into it, and I made her tell me where the mine is and how to get a look at it. She came clean."

"How did she know?"

"She'd been told. And she was out of her depth already. She wanted word with the bully, and she tried to get me to stay where I was. But I thought of the bay mare standing outside in the alley, and she fidgety, and you fond of the mare and liable to find fault with me if she should come to harm. And I guessed it'd be wise to look into the woman's story first."

"You'd better leave that woman and her bully guessing, and show me the mine. Where is it?"

O'Leary pointed: "Two hours from now, when the moon's about there, I can guide you to a place where you can see along under the apron of water."

"Very well, O'Leary. Which way did you come?"

"Short cut. Don't you try it. Horse might break a leg."

"All right, I'll follow the road. Meet me in camp."

O'Leary vanished. Norwood had ridden another fifty yards when he heard angry shouting, several times repeated. He wasn't sure, but he thought he also heard a girl's voice. He rode forward slowly and then, a bit alarmed by the ensuing silence, stirred his horse to a canter. He drew rein, looking upward at Lynn, not much more than two or three minutes after Rundhia had left her. She was sitting in full moonlight on top of the wall, on a cushion, with one foot hanging over the wall and her back against the wall.

EAST BETHEL SCHOOL NOTES

Deferred

The children of the Primary Room entertained the smaller children of the community at a Valentine Party Friday afternoon, February 9th. Valentine games were enjoyed and Valentines were distributed from a Valentine "Mail Box." Moving pictures were shown to the little visitors, also. The picture shown was "The Story of the Three Bears." The "camera" and the "films" were made by the primary room.

The guests were Shirley Bartlett, Carline Dorey, Edward Hastings, Warren Hastings, Keith Bartlett, Clark Bartlett, Dorothy Ann Bartlett and Robert Curtis.

In connection with history and arithmetic classes the pupils of the East Bethel Grammar School had a Trade and Barter afternoon last Friday. By bringing to school several things for which they had no need, and by exchanging until they had acquired something which they valued, the pupils were enabled to observe the workings of one of the oldest systems of exchange.

The feeding station which was presented to the school by Barbara Hastings has been a "No Bird's Land" since Christmas. Lately, however, the crumbs, hay chaff and suet have begun to attract a few of the common winter birds. As the birds become more familiar with the station we hope to observe many different birds.

The library corner of both the primary and grammar room have been very busy places since Christmas. Several interesting new books have been added, and we have all enjoyed the contacts they have given us with distant places and people.

Hornbill, Old Bird, Has Beak Heavier Than Body

Hornbills, birds of the Palearctic order, range from about 11 inches in length to one which measures five feet from the tip of the beak to the end of the tail. When we look at one of the larger hornbills, observes a writer in London Times magazine, we wonder how it manages to keep its balance with a beak that appears to be heavier than the body. Some species wear a crown or horn above the great beak, and this adds to the weight.

It is thought that the strange appearance of hornbills causes the ancient Egyptians to designate the cry of the pharaoh. This tells us of a fabulous life but that hornbills live or ex hundred years is the oldest of tales. I am not a fanatic, but I am a fanatic for the hornbill. I have seen one of these birds, and as now upon our "Union" Always shines the glorious sun as the "Father of his Country" We'll remember Washington

The hornbills of Africa have a loud, hoarse cry which often frightens the birds. It resembles the cry of an ass or the loud cry of a person in pain. These birds are not only kept away from the trees, but also from the keys of the piano and other instruments that might play upon them.

OUR WASHINGTON

Addie Kendall Mason

In the Old Dominion Valley,
Where soft southern breezes blow,
To a quaint vine-covered farm house
Came a baby—long ago.
Just a tiny laughing youngster,
Bringing love and care and fun,
Destined to be famed in history
As our noble Washington.

Oh! I wonder, did that mother,
Bending o'er her baby fair,
Ever, of his far off future
Build bright castles in the air.
Now no parent, ever dreaming
Of the life work of a son
But who prays that he be ever
Brave and true like Washington.

Well I know the sun shone brightly
On that long gone winter day
While Potomac's waters murmured
Songs of gladness on their way;
Destiny with skillful fingers
Wrote upon the scroll of Fate
That the "Father of his Country"
Should be Washington the Great.

Childhood's days went by so swiftly
Where the Rappahannock flows,
Manhood came and midst its vision,
He oft heard the treacherous
Who were threatening dire destruction
To the laws, the homes, and land.
Then with courage never daunted
He was Washington the Grand.

Leaving home and wife so cherished
For "up north" he took his stand
And the Continental Army
Went and came at his command.
Soon came Monmouth's famous battle,
Strongly fought and ably won;
Then all patriots were cheering
Our brave General Washington.

To and fro the tide of battle
Ebb'd and flow'd for three long years;
But with faith in Truth and Justice
He set our hearts to having fears
That the army could be beaten,
While his men could hold a gun;
So again they marched to Victory
Led by valiant Washington.

And when leaves in bleak October
Fell to earth a russet brown,
All the bands in famous Yorktown
Played "The World Is Upside Down!"
For Cornwallis with his soldiers
Who had fought in storm and sun,
Here surrendered sword and army
Unto General Washington.

Thus the war of Revolution
Passed into our history old;
Yet still to the growing children
Tales of Washington are told.
How his life was lived so truthful
And no wrong by him was done—
That the people made him ruler—
Made him President Washington.

Wisely, carefully, he guided
Many years our "Ship of State,"
Through its days of infant struggles,
When uncertain was its fate
And as now upon our "Union"
Always shines the glorious sun
As the "Father of his Country"
We'll remember Washington

Grand Mount Vernon's scenic beauty
Sweeps the perfume laden breeze
And the song birds' merry carols
Fill with music all the trees.
But methinks the whispering zephyrs
Float more gently on, and on,
While the birds sing softer, sweeter,
At the tomb of Washington
